

NBC BRIEFING

4 March 1957

JAPAN - BACKGROUND

I. Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi has good prospects for continuing in power for a considerable time.

A. He now enjoys near-unanimous party support and has avoided commitments to the competing intra-party factions.

B. He is expected to provide able vigorous leadership in directing domestic and foreign policy and party affairs.

C. He is a shrewd politician, is respected for his intelligence and ability, and there is a chance he may succeed in uniting the younger party leaders into an effective political and governing organization.

II. Kishi has indicated he will continue his predecessor's program with which he was closely identified.

A. Domestically his policy will emphasize social welfare programs, increased productivity and employment, and a balanced budget.

B. Major features of his foreign policy include:

1. Achievement of an independent international position through the framework of the United Nations and alignment with the Asian-African bloc;
2. Continued co-operation with the United States, but with adjustments in the relationship to provide greater equality;
3. Increased relations with the Communist bloc, but limited to avoid jeopardizing relations with the

4. Expanded economic relations with Communist China, but diplomatic recognition to await Peiping's acceptance by the UN;
5. A settlement with South Korea;
6. Stimulation of economic ties with Southeast Asia.

III. Kishi reportedly intends to form his own cabinet at the end of the current Diet session, scheduled for 18 May.

- A. He hopes to avoid holding a general election until May 1958, but political and popular pressure may force an earlier ballot.
- B. Kishi tends, by his own admission, to swim with the political tide and this could reduce his effectiveness as a partner in the Far East.

IV. Prospects for reopening formal talks between Japan and South Korea have improved recently.

- A. The Japanese have met most of the demands which Rhee put forth as pre-conditions for the talks such as:
 1. The release of Koreans detained in Japan simultaneously with the release by Korea of detained Japanese fishermen;
 2. South Korea will accept released Korean detainees who illegally entered Japan after 1945, Japan will not seek to deport those who entered Japan before the end of World War II;
 3. Japan will disavow a Japanese statement regarded as critical of Korea's sovereignty;

4. Japan will withdraw its claims to property in Korea in line with the American interpretation of the applicable provision in the San Francisco peace treaty. Settlement of the Khasi line issue and the South Korean president's strong anti-Japanese attitude will remain major obstacles to a complete rapprochement.
- V. Japan's economy has benefitted from two successive above-average rice harvests and general world-wide economic prosperity.
 - A. The 1956 balance of payments was about $293,000,000 in the black and Japan's foreign exchange reserves rose to over $1.5 billion.
 - B. Future economic expansion, however, will be limited by bottlenecks in the iron and steel, electric power, and transportation industries.
- VI. Kishi believes world peace depends on the Free World continuing to maintain economic as well as military superiority over the Communist bloc.
 - A. He hopes that American aid can be linked with Japanese reparations payments in the development of Southeast Asia, thereby strengthening both that area and Japan.
 - B. He fears that Communist China will be a growing threat to Japan's economic interests in the area.
- VII. Japan is encountering growing restrictions on trade imposed by the Western nations.
 - A. These restrictions threaten the nation's ability to maintain a satisfactory level of economic activity.

- B. A decline in the economy will jeopardize the conservative position and will incline Japan toward neutralism and an accommodation with the Sino-Soviet bloc.
- C. The Socialists, who hold about one-third of the Diet seats, would be able to exploit such a situation and accelerate neutralist trends.
